Old Malvern Hall. A RUINED VIRGINIA MANSION. [For the Dispatch by Benjamin Batchelder Val-

Its days are o'er, its glory fled.
And desolation covers all:
Alas! those happy hearts are dead
That made the life of Malvern Hall.

Few of their line on earth remain, Few souls that leve the ancient place, And they have left the old demesne, The wandering sons of noble race.

For they must fight life's battle stern, 'Mist hardships sore and trials sad: 'Min hardships sore and trials sad; And by their efforts bravely earn. The honored fame their fathers had.

About the ruin still there glows
A remnant of its old-time fire,
Last, lingering lights left to disclose
A worf of waste e'er they expire.

E'en from a distance one yet sees. Two of its Doric pillare stand; Sheltered alone by tall clin trees, They overlook the harried land.

As from Egyptian sea of sands
There still rise tapering monoliths,
Transmitting pairs of marital bands,
Through crude-cut bleroglyphs.

So on these pillars war's rade hand. Has carved, with bull and bursting. The tragic tale of concurred land, In signs we read too well.

The rows of box in growing arched
A bower, where lovers off did stray;
Now they are leafless, sear, and parched,
And invests fret their life away.

Above you coppies, where the brook E'en 'mid its murmuring strives to Embowered by trees, in shady nook, Sparkled the limpid spring.

The weary plowman leved to quaff its liquid crystals bubbling up, Returning oft to take a draught From such a wassail cup.

Now in it float the fallen leaves, And roots and weeds obstruct its No kindly care it e er receives, But finds its channel as it may.

And in its boughs she builds her nest And finds a refuge for the night.

The trees alone, with heads held high, Withstand the beating of the blast, And in their tops they seem to sigh: The Past! The Past! The Past!

Thus, thus, has war, with savage mien, Spread broadcast death and sown decay, And many a rum murs the scene Where stood a home on yesterday.

At eventide the clouds, in heaps, Let neither moon nor stars intrude, While through the darkness nature weeps O'er the bare fields and solitude.

An Old-Time Epitaph.

For the Dispatch.

Not many years ago there lived in lower virginia an old gentleman named Teazell, of whom the following story is related. The narrator of the ancelote says that Teazell, while not a religious man, was condition might be in the next world. On one occasion, while our hero was laid up with a severe attack of dyspepsia, a gentleman arrived in the neighborhood who had quite a reputation as a poetaster, but who unites with this accomplishment at disposition for waggery. Teazell hearing of this person and being decidedly down on his luck on account of his midisposition, offered him fifty dollars to write his epitaph. The gentleman, who was a quick worker, in a few minutes produced a verse with which Teazell was so pleased that he spot and requested him to complete the work and bring it to his residence the following day. When the poet arrived at the appointed time he found a large concourse of friends, wh. Teazell had called to gether to admire the epitaph. Being requested to do so, the gentleman began at the first verse and read as follows:

Here he had not marry a man too old.

woman, but the woman seldom the man. One cause of this is the fact that a woman's home is her world, and when she sees and feels her mistake, the heart and energy are powerless. Marry vour equal always.

8. As far as position in society is concerned, it is better to marry in your own sphere, but let it be man of worth—of character. Do not for money's sake sell your life and bappiness. Many unhappy marriages to-day are caused from money matches. In your sphere in society associate with gentlemen, for there are many in your circle born of good parents who are not gentlemen.

Now my last injunction is that you marry a Christian man—not a preacher if you do not like preachers—not a make-believe, but a man who loves God and who through that love will be the upright, correct man, who will make your home his home, who will love home as he loves not club-room, theatres, etc. Then you strive to make that home as attractive as you possibly can. If he wants to lean back in a charand put his feet up on the mantle shelf let let him do it if it makes him comfortable; you can brush the dust off afterwards.

When you are married, when you have chosen, he it for better or be it for worse, never go diving down into your husband's past life. Take up his life just where yours "as one" begins.

More About Mist Juleps.

PRITERSURG, Va., June 20, 1891.

To the Editor of the Dispatch:

Relative to the inquiry of C. B. S. in last Sunday's issue of the Dispatch as to the crigin of mint juleps, I will state that if the inquirer will read Captain Marryatt's novels he will find more about juleps, as one of his novels makes mention of the introduction of this pala'able drink in America.

A. T. J.

Ingout the newspapers, he draws on his glasses and begins to read. After a while he reads out some passage in which he is much interested—on free coinage, tariff reform, and so on—and you, poor little disappointed wife, with a face a martyr would wear, sit still and listen—that is, if you are a good wife; if not, you will feel tempted, may be, to raise the broom-handle. No, marry a man near your own age, even if he be a couple of yearsyour junior; you will have more inclination to enjoy life. A man five or six years older will be of the best age, but do not marry a man too old.

3. A man in courting a girigives her very he was stingy, and he is to this day.

4. Notice a man to see if he is considerate of mother and sister; if so, he will make a considerate husband, and the woman who obtains a considerate husband gains a jewel that will sparkle in the home, and make home an Eden. When you make your toilet for your lover, after you have turned and twisted a little bow first to this side then to that in order that it may turned and twisted a little bow first to this side then to that in order that it may be becoming and please him, if he does not notice it, and in some delicate way refer to it be assured that after marriage you may toil half the day to make your toilet attractive for his coming at dinner time and he will never take a particle of notice of it; but, hanging his hat on the rack, will call out "Mary, dear, is dinner ready; I am in the biggest kind of a hurry. will be left to admire yourself in the looking-glass after he is gone. Study a man closely to see what estimate he places on woman; and avoid that man as you would an adder who would want you to hold your engagement a secret from parents, especially a mother. Tell him bravely that you will consult mother always, and you will be free from the trapper.

5. Do not be beguiled by the handsome man; nine cases out of ten he will think more of his good looks than he does of you. Men are vain, although they will not admit it. Now, do not understand me that I object to the handsome man entirely, for like the rest of womankind I have a weakness for the good-looking man. But the honest, open face, with individuality stamped upon it, makes the husband for the woman to be proud of, and every woman likes to be proud of her husband; but the hard-looking, ugly face very few women can love. But do not let looks fool you—learn to read character through the lace.

Girls, it behooves you to look to this point most assiduously. You could never make a greater mistake in life. When a woman marries beneath her the man will drag her down to his level. A woman less frequently brings a man up to her standard; a man may elevate the woman, but the woman seldom the man.
